Advances in the artificial feeding of infants

● The introduction of dried milk simplified and increased the safety of artificial feeding and has had a notable influence on infant health during the feeding period. Since that day, more than 35 years ago, there have been three notable advances, all embodied in Ostermilk :

(a) the development of a 'humanised' formula, as that of Ostermilk No. 1,

(b) the addition of iron and vitamin D*, as in both Ostermilk No. 1 and No. 2,

(c) the reduced cost achieved in 1928 when means were found to halve the price of dried milk food without impairing quality.

Ostermilk is a roller-dried milk food of standardised composition ; it is bacteriologically safe and contains added iron and vitamin D. Ostermilk No. 1 with reduced fat and protein and an increased lactose content is suitable for infants up to three months ; Ostermilk No. 2 is a full cream food for older infants.

When breast-feeding fails, it can be safely supplemented with or replaced by Ostermilk.

what MILTON is . . .

2. NOT DAKIN'S SOLUTION*

Milton is not Dakin's Solution. Milton is prepared by the electrolysis of sodium chloride in solution, stabilised by a special process and standardised at 1% of sodium hypochlorite. It is non-irritant.

Dakin's Solution is prepared from bleaching powder or chlorinated lime. During recent independent tests very wide variations were found in the composition of Dakin's Solution as prepared at several London hospitals.

In the case of Milton alone the disadvantages of Dakin's Solution have been overcome.

For stability and low alkalinity the choice is Milton—not Dakin's Solution.

Applications with details of training and experience, and copies of not less than three testimonials should be enclosed in an envelope endorsed "Matron," and addressed to the undersigned at the Hospital, not later than Monday, October 6th.
PERCY F. SPOONER, (Secretary) (2492N)

DEVONSHIRE ROYAL HOSPITAL, BUXTON
A NATIONAL HOSPITAL OF 300 BEDS FOR THE TREATMENT OF RHEUMATIC DISEASES
Applications are invited for the post of Matron which will become vacant on January 1st, 1946.
Candidates must be State Registered Nurses and previous administrative experience is desirable.
Salary will be in accordance with the Rushcliffe Scale and the appointment is subject to the provisions of the Federated Superannuation Scheme.
Applications in writing, stating age, present employment, and previous experience, together with full particulars of qualifications, and the names of three persons to whom enquiries may be addressed, should be forwarded to the undersigned not later than October 13th, 1945.
By order of the Board,
A. PRESTON TURNER, General Superintendent and Secretary (2465N)

PUTNEY HOSPITAL
APPOINTMENT OF MATRON
Applications are invited for the appointment of Matron to the Putney Hospital.
Candidates must be State Registered Nurses with administrative experience in a hospital. The hospital is a voluntary general hospital, and is a recognised training school for nurses. Salary in accordance with the Rushcliffe Scale. Federated Superannuation Scheme in force. Applications, stating age, and giving full details of qualifications and experience should be addressed at once to: The Chairman, Putney Hospital, Lower Common, Putney, S.W.15. (2457N)

ASSOCIATION FOR THE PREVENTION OF CONSUMPTION IN THE COUNTY OF SALOP
SHIRLETT SANATORIUM NEAR BROSELEY, SHROPSHIRE
APPOINTMENT OF MATRON
Applications are invited for the post of Matron (resident) at Shirlett Sanatorium (70 beds), which will be vacant on January 1st, 1946.
Applicants must be State-registered Nurses, and, preferably, have had Sanatorium and Housekeeping experience. Salary and Emoluments according to the Rushcliffe scale. Superannuation (Local Government Superannuation Act, 1922, or 1937) will apply to this post.
The selected candidate will be required to undergo a medical examination for Superannuation purposes.
Applications accompanied by copies of three recent testimonials should reach the undersigned not later than October 31st, 1945.

For Nursing in the Colonial Empire

EVERY nurse will study with great interest the Report of the Committee on the Training of Nurses for the Colonies recently published by His Majesty's Stationery Office, York House, Kingsway, London, W.C.2. (Price 1s.)* The Committee responsible for the report was set up in November, 1943, " to examine the question of training, both in this country and overseas, for nurses who are to serve in Colonial territories, and to make recommendations having regard also to the need in those territories for increased public health activities and for the fostering and development of community welfare." The Committee consisted of the chairman, Lord Rushcliffe, a vice-chairman and 15 members ; of these six were, we believe, nurses, but, unfortunately, although the names of medical personnel carry their qualifications, the letters S.R.N. do not appear after the names of any of the nurses ; perhaps this is the fault of the nurses themselves. The Report gives a short history of the growth of medical and nursing services in the Colonies, and makes wide and detailed recommendations for future development.

The Report reminds us that, in the first place, the medical and nursing services in the Colonies were set up to look after the health of Government officials recruited from this country, but have developed, at different rates in different places, until now they are one of the principal social services and affect the welfare of the peoples of the various territories of the Colonial Empire. In the first place the nursing services were staffed entirely by nurses recruited by this country, the Dominions and the nursing sisterhoods of Europe ; as they grew it was obvious that local recruits must form much of the staff, and doctors and nurses set to work to train them. At first most of these recruits were males and were illiterate, but, as education improved and barriers were broken down, it was possible to attract both male and female nurses and to train them more satisfactorily.

The Report stresses that the future aim must be to interest local women and local men in the nursing profession and to train them in local training schools. Here there are two difficulties : in some areas general education is backward, particularly with regard to opportunities for girls ; in other areas, although there are educated girls, the general outlook may be that nursing is not suitable work for educated, cultured women, and a " Florence Nightingale " is needed to lead the way, and break down prejudice. However, the general educational facilities are everywhere continually improving and must be further improved, and the scheme of nurse training suggested allows for a continuance of general education throughout the training period—an idea which might well be extended to nursing education in this country, now that entry into the profession takes place at 18 instead of 21 or 22 years of age, and even at 16 years of age girls may be devoting some of their time to professional subjects in the pre-nursing school.

The Report suggests that each Colonial territory or group of territories should set up representative Nursing and Midwives' Councils or possibly a joint Council for the training and registration of both nurses and midwives. These Councils should adopt standards of training which will make their certificates acceptable to the General Nursing Council of England and Wales for State Registration, and to the Central Midwives Board. It does, however, also suggest that in educationally backward areas the training of nurses and midwives shall be in a much simplified form, and shall be gradually upgraded till it reaches the standard set by the General Nursing Council.

The Report makes no suggestions in regard to the composition of these Nursing Councils. The Royal College of Nursing, through the Horder Nursing Reconstruction Committee's Report, has stressed the fact that the nursing profession here is not entirely satisfied with the composition of the General Nursing Council. It will be a pity if Colonial territories copy a structure which is not as perfect as it could be, and we wish the whole matter could be reconsidered from this point of view.

The Report suggests that the Colonies arrange for a four-year period of training, the fourth year being spent in gaining additional experience in hospital, or in taking a community nursing course or a midwifery course; this four-year training includes allowance for a " block system " of training and the scheme illustrated allows for 32 weeks of theoretical instruction during the four years, in contrast to the 28 weeks suggested in the Horder Report, Section 11. This is made up of 12 weeks in the preliminary training school, two weeks towards the end of the first year to include the first examination, two periods of four weeks each in the second and third years divided by a period of eight weeks, and an additional two weeks at the end of the third year for revision and examination. With this generous allowance of time for nursing education and due allowance for annual holidays, the necessity for a four-year training course is obvious ; a well-informed and capable nurse should be the product of such a scheme. We wonder why the second and third year blocks should be divided into two four-week blocks rather than one eight-week block. The Report gives no reason for making this suggestion and it does not appear to have any specific value ; if the students can benefit from a 12-week preliminary training period, would not the eight-week period be equally suitable and also more easily organized and more profitable?

There are many points of special interest in the Report. One is that, as an experiment, joint training colleges of a residential type might be set up for student nurses, student teachers and possibly other vocational students. This would certainly make it possible to deal more easily with the continuation of general education and for this six hours per week are set aside in every block period—a very interesting suggestion.

As in this country, the suggested syllabus and apportioning of time throws stress on the preventive and social aspects of medical and nursing work. This is further stressed by the opportunity given to nurses in the fourth year to train as "community nurses." Owing to the scattered nature of the population and the fact that many tropical diseases can be prevented by attention to hygiene and health teaching, much of the medical work and nursing in the Colonies must be done outside the hospitals, in the homes, and in dispensaries, health and maternity centres. The community nurse must be a teacher and a leader, and not merely a healer ; large numbers of these community nurses will be needed if the health of the local population in the Empire territories is to advance and be a credit to this country.

The Report also stresses the desirability of giving post-certificate training to nurses trained here to prepare them for work in the Colonies and also for giving nurses trained in the Colonies opportunity for post-certificate training here as sister-tutors, nurse administrators and health tutors, etcetera. All these recommendations should develop the standards of nursing and nurse training throughout the Empire, and help to establish that security of health which is the most important of all securities.

Topical Notes

The Newer Sulphonamides

The Medical Research Council has just published a second edition of its Memorandum on 'The Medical Use of Sulphonamides.'* which nurses and student nurses who want to have the latest information about this important group of drugs will find of great interest. The Memorandum gives first a list of the various sulphonamide preparations, their solubility, and special uses; this includes the newer preparations, 'sulphamezathine,' 'sulphamerazine,' which are rapidly absorbed but slowly excreted, so that they produce a higher and more persistent concentration in the blood than other sulphonamides, and sulphaguanidine and succinylsulphathiazole, which are slowly absorbed and therefore valuable for the treatment of bacillary dysentery and for the disinfection of the bowel contents before operation. Last on the list is the German preparation 'Marfanil' prepared for local application and not antagonized by pus or necrotic tissue : this may be of value in the prevention and treatment of gas gangrene. (See also pages 638 and 640).

To Prevent Sciatica

An interesting section on pharmacology follows in which the nurse will be most interested in the lists of local anaesthetics which antagonize this group of drugs; there are also sections on the use of sulphonamides in relation to penicillin, therapy, dosage, administration, toxic effects and treatment of specific infections. Among many helpful details on nursing points are the need to maintain an output of 50 ounces of urine and to keep it alkaline and a warning never to give an intramuscular injection near any important nerve, as these drugs may cause a toxic neuritis. The risk of an intractable sciatica from gluteal injections is avoided by a direct recommendation to use the vastus externus—a direction the nurse should bear in mind. The authors also recommend that intramuscular injections of the sodium salts of the sulphonamides be limited in number, spaced at least three inches apart and given deeply into the muscle. Nurses will find a glance at the transverse sections of the thigh in Gray's Anatomy helpful here.

A Doctor's Suggestion

One wonders if Mr. H. B. Stallard would not find himself considerably hindered in his own work if his suggestion published in the Daily Telegraph this week—that war-time nurses (some of whom have had six years nursing experience) should take the General Nursing Council's final examination after a six month's intensive theoretical course—were accepted by the nursing profession. Many of these nurses may have done the same kind of work most of the time, may have been working in special departments and doing things which would be of little help to a State registered nurse in a peace-time world. Mr. Stallard may not realize that the nurse's training is long for a purpose, so that every nurse may have practical experience, usually by day and night, and often for three to six months, in all the many types of work—medical, surgical, gynaecological, ear, nose and throat, eye, sick children, out-patients, theatre and so on. No amount of theory can produce the calm efficiency necessary for theatre work, the confidence to be able, for example, to syringe an ear effectively, without damage or discomfort or the sympathetic persuasion needed to get a youngster to take his medicine without a struggle. Doctors might find treatment produced a harmful rather than a beneficial effect if the 'State-registered nurse' responsible had never done it before, however good her theoretical instruction. It is surprising that Mr. Stallard, a medical man himself who has undergone a long training, does not appreciate these points. In a subsequent letter published in the Daily Telegraph, Miss D. Jenkins, Q.A.I.M.N.S.(R.) points out that, in any case, a member of the auxiliary nursing services has been free to obtain immediate release to become State-registered so that there are unlikely to be large numbers who want to start now. There certainly is a need for more nurses but this will not be satisfied by lowering the standards and consequently the status of the profession.

Analgesia Easier

REGULATIONS governing the qualifications of the second person who must be present whilst a midwife is administering nitrous oxide and air analgesia have been relaxed. The Central Midwives Board announces that this person need only be acceptable to the patient and, in the opinion of the midwife, suitable for the purpose. Previously she had to be qualified according to Section 3 of the Regulations by being, for instance, a State-registered nurse, a senior medical student or, being over 21, have been a member of the Civil Nursing Reserve for at least a year. The present shortage of nurses has, however, made the carrying out of this regulation extremely difficult especially as more midwives having trained in the use of analgesia are able to give it to the mothers. All midwives will be glad therefore, that correspondence between the Board and the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists has resulted in this decision.

A Welcome to the Bottle

THE rubber hot water bottle is coming back and will soon be in the shops at ceiling prices of 7s. 2d. or 8s. 3d. (moulded) and 12s. 11d. (hand made). There is no doubt that a warm welcome awaits it for the recent first taste of wintry weather and gales has lead to much searching in cupboards for the war-time stone or metal substitute. 'Four years accumulated demand,' as the Board of Trade puts it, will be difficult to meet and the shopkeeper, on presentation of a medical certificate for an expectant mother or sick person, will immediately obtain a rubber hot water bottle from his usual supplier. An agreement between manufacturers and the Central Price Regulation Committee will enable substantial supplies to be priced considerably below the ceiling prices.

Westminster's Swimming Gala

NURSES and medical students took part in the Westminster City Swimming Gala held, in aid of the Westminster Hospital, at the Marshall Street Baths on the evening of September 20. There was a large audience and ardent supporters cheered their representatives in the various races. Men and women champions of international fame gave a display of perfect diving, individually and in teams, and at the conclusion of the gala there was an exciting water-polo match between the Willesden Swimming Club and the Metropolitan Police, the former scoring an easy victory. Competitors included members of the Civil Service, Westminster Technical Institute, and Sea Cadets. Councillor D. Woods, Mayor of Westminster, congratulated the authorities—who had had only one month in which to arrange everything—on the very satisfactory results of their efforts. Inter-hospital races were hotly contested and the general standard was extremely high. University College Hospital won the nurses' relay race, with a speed of 1 min. 42 sec., Middlesex Hospital coming a close second and Guy's Hospital third. In the students' (male) relay race, Guy's Hospital came first (1 min. 10 sec.) with Middlesex Hospital next and University College Hospital third. The West London Hospital was victorious in both the ladies' one length breast stroke and one length free style races, Miss Tucker (medical student) winning the former in 29 seconds and Miss Plackett (medical student) the latter in 24 seconds. Miss G. Pugh, a nurse from Westminster Hospital, won the nurses' and medical students' one length back stroke race in 29 seconds. Guy's Hospital triumphed in the male students' one length back stroke and one length free style races, Mr. J. Keeling winning the former in 21 seconds and Mr. D. Grey the latter in 17 seconds. It was a highly successful evening, not the least of its triumphs being the sum of £75 which has been presented to Westminster Hospital.

Mackenzie, M.A., published in the Nursing Times, have been reprinted in booklet form. Help for Hospitals' Day

MANY helpful suggestions regarding Hospitals' Day, October 20, were put forward at the "tea-occasion" held in the Grosvenor House Hotel on September 19. The "anonymous donor and host"—later revealed as Mr. Charles Hayward, ardent supporter of the voluntary hospital—is to be congratulated on the success of the gathering which was presided over by Lord Luke, Chairman of the Hospitals Day Committee, Lady Luke also being present. Among the points raised by guests and replied to by Lord Luke was the vexed subject of boundaries. Complaints were made that certain collectors "trespassed" into other areas, causing confusion and annoyance. Lord Luke said that full particulars should be taken at the time and forwarded to the Committee who had authority to deal with the situation according to the Constitution. As a preventative it was suggested that depot holders should receive a sketch map of the area instead of a "book of words." Helpful ideas on publicity were as follows: big stores should be asked to give Hospitals Day the same assistance and publicity as they gave to Alexandra and Poppy Days; multiple shops should be asked to take baskets and collecting boxes; hospitals should seek the help of the National Fire Service by approaching the Chief Regional Officer: posters appealing for collectors should have a space where, in each district, the name of the nearest voluntary hospital could be filled in: the distinction between the May and October Hospital Days should be made clear to the public which did not always discriminate between general and special hospitals. Helpers are still needed.

Poetic Appeal

SIR Charles Tennyson, grandson of Lord Tennyson, recited certain of the latter's well-known poems, and the aptness of these was commented on by Mr. Sydney Walton, a member of the Committee, in his speech of thanks. To "go where money is" was good advice, and he quoted a neat little verse to the effect that the three loveliest words in the language were "enclosed find cheque." As love for a hospital was best implemented by that phrase he thought secretaries issuing appeals might make a note of the verse. Mr. Walton added that Colonel W. H. Rankin, of New York (who was present with his daughter) had been charged with the task of seeing that, as regards the conclusion of Lease-Lend, an exception should be made in the case of voluntary hospitals.

INJURIES TO THE JAWS*

By A. C. BUCHAN, F.R.C.S.(E.), L.D.S.(E.),
Assistant Surgeon, Plastic and Jaw Injury Unit, Bangour Hospital, Broxburn, West Lothian

Above : diagrams of four types of fracture and an Elastoplast bandage which may be used as a first aid measure

IN peace-time civil practice, fractures of the jaws are relatively uncommon and accordingly the principles and methods of treatment are probably not so widely known as might be. During this present war the number of maxillo-facial injuries requiring treatment has increased, and the correct treatment of these cases becomes a matter of some importance—even a matter of life and death in the severer types. To give an adequate account of the nursing and general care of maxillo-facial injuries, some mention, without going into details, must be made of the types of injuries and of the methods used in treating them.

1. Mandibular fracture (Fig. 1).—This type of fracture may be (a) edentulous ; (b) with teeth ; or (c) with soft tissue wounds.

In each of these large groups, fractures of the mandible may be further subdivided as follows according to the site and the number of the fractures :—

I. A single fracture may be (a) a condyle fracture ; (b) an angle fracture ; (c) a premolar or canine fracture ; or (d) an incisor fracture.

II. In multiple fractures many variations occur but the commonest are : (a) a fracture at an angle on one side and in the premolar or canine region on the other ; (b) a fracture of both condyles which may be associated with a fracture in the incisor or canine regions ; (c) a bilateral fracture in canine regions isolating central part of mandible.

III. In a fracture with bone loss, part of the mandible may be shattered by a bullet or a shell fragment. The external wound may be gross and subsequent repair very difficult.

2. Maxillary fracture.—These fractures may be exceedingly complex and varied, and may or may not be associated with a soft tissue wound. They can be classified as follows :—

I. Unilateral fracture with separation of one-half of the maxilla from the other in the mid-line of the palate (Fig.2).

II. Bilateral fracture with the fracture line passing through the lower lateral wall of the nose and the antrum with or without separation of the two halves (Fig. 3).

III. Fracture of the middle third of the face, the fracture line involving the upper part of the nose and passing along the floor of the orbit either on one side or both, and frequently associated with a fracture of the malar bone (Fig. 4).

Displacement of Fragments

In the mandible the main factor causing displacement is muscular. The anterior muscles all pull downwards and the posterior muscles in an upward and inward direction. The position of the fracture line and the direction of the force are of less significance. For example, when there is a fracture through the premolar or molar regions on one side, the short posterior fragment is frequently displaced upwards, forwards and inwards and the longer anterior fragment displaced downwards.

In the maxilla displacement is almost entirely due to the direction of the causative force. There are no powerful muscles attached to the maxilla.

Symptoms and Clinical Diagnosis

In the less severe injuries the patient may only complain of slight pain on mastication and on examination there is only a diffuse swelling with pain on palpation. Here the diagnosis must rest on the X-ray findings. In the more severe cases, the patient will complain of a very severe pain on every movement of the mandible in swallowing and in mastication. Swallowing and mastication may even be impossible. Swelling and tenderness will be marked. There will often be an obvious alteration in the alignment of the teeth. When the fracture is compound into the mouth, as is frequently the case, there will be bleeding into the mouth with a laceration of the gum. The inferior dental nerve may be divided and produce a characteristic numbness of the lower lip and chin on the same side. Abnormal mobility of the fragments may be quite obvious.

So far as the maxilla is concerned, there is not as a rule the same interference with swallowing and speech. Swelling of the face is likely to be marked. There may be an alteration in the alignment of the teeth with or without impaction of the fragments. Bleeding from the nose is likely, perhaps unilateral. If a fracture of the malar is present, a retro-conjunctival haemorrhage is characteristic especially if associated with double vision from alteration in the level of the orbital floor, or with difficulty in opening the mouth from pressure of the malar on the temporal muscle and ascending ramus of the mandible. In severe facial fractures there are frequently associated cranial injuries.

First Aid Treatment

In the less severe cases where there is no large external wound, and no gross displacement of the fragments, little need be done apart from supporting the mandible by some form of bandage. Every movement of swallowing or speech will cause pain at the fracture site and the application of some support will give the patient very considerable relief. The bandage, however, should not pull the mandible backwards—the pull should be upwards as much as possible. A satisfactory type of support can be made from Elastoplast. A double length of Elastoplast, sticky sides together, is passed over the vertex of the skull and between the layers of a similar double length of Elastoplast passed horizontally round the skull. A third length of Elastoplast passes under the chin and is attached to the first piece by tapes which can be tightened as is necessary (Fig. 5).

It is in the severer injuries that first aid measures are of paramount importance. The patient may be unconscious, and the tongue may have lost its attachments and have fallen backwards into the throat. Without urgent treatment the patient is in danger of suffocating. The tongue must be pulled forward and held there by anything that is available—tongue forceps, a silk stitch (or even a safety pin) passed through the tip. Blood, loose teeth, foreign bodies, etcetera, should be cleared out of the mouth and throat in case they are aspirated into the lung. The patient should be placed in the semi-prone position so that blood and saliva may run out of the mouth.

Haemorrhage must be controlled. It is seldom severe from the fracture but if the lingual, facial or carotid arteries are damaged haemorrhage may be very severe. Local pressure is usually sufficient to control it, but artery forceps applied to the bleeding point of the haemorrhage, if severe, may be necessary. Bleeding from the lingual artery may be controlled by pulling the tongue forward. A dressing should be applied to any wound present. In addition, first aid treatment of any other injuries must be carried out as well until the patient can be taken to hospital. During transport the dangers of obstruction to the airway and of haemorrhage must be guarded against.

Methods of Treatment

Absolute fixation of the fracture in its correct position at the earliest possible time is always the ideal of treatment. Many methods are available and the following summary indicates those most frequently used and indicates the type of case for which they are used :—

1. Inter Maxillary Wiring.—Stainless steel wires are passed round the premolar or molar teeth on both sides of each jaw, and are then connected together from mandible to maxilla (Fig. 6). By these means the teeth on the upper jaw can be firmly fixed to the teeth on the lower jaw in their proper relation. This method is the simplest of all but is only applicable if sufficient teeth are present in both jaws. It is eminently suitable for simple fractures and for the emergency treatment of the more difficult cases. If treatment is going to be prolonged or if the wires snap frequently it is better to use cap splints.

2. Cap Splints.—Impressions are taken of the patient's teeth and from these cast metal splints are made (Figs. 7 and 8). The splints are cemented to the patient's teeth and the upper splint fixed to the lower by means of plates and screws, a locking pin or by wire. If there are teeth on both sides of the fracture only a single splint is necessary. This method is much more reliable than the first ; the splints may remain in place for months if necessary and can be used where there are insufficient teeth for wiring methods.

3. Gunning's Splint (Fig. 9).—Neither of the first two methods are applicable where the patient has no teeth. Reduction of the fracture does not need to be so accurate as when teeth are present. In the latter case the fracture must unite so that the teeth can come into proper contact but in an edentulous case any slight displacement of the fragments can be corrected by dentures.

The Gunning Splint consists of vulcanite or plastic upper and lower dentures joined together by wires leaving a space in front for feeding purposes (Fig. 9). Instead of making this splint the patient's own dentures may be used after the front teeth have been removed. In each case a firm elastic bandage is applied to pull the lower jaw upwards.

4. Circumferential Wiring.—If neither of these methods can control the fracture sufficiently, a vulcanite or plastic plate may be made for the mandible. The plate is then wired to the mandible by stainless steel wires passing round the bone (Fig. 10 and 11). If necessary a similar plate may be fixed to the maxilla, the upper and lower being wired together.

5. Roger Anderson Pins.—In this method pins are driven at different angles through the skin into the mandible, two pins being inserted into each fragment. The pins are then connected firmly together by universal joints and rods (Fig. 11 and 12). This method may be used in fractures of the edentulous mandible where other methods are not suitable or it may be used either with or without other methods where there are no teeth on one fragment. If, for example, there are no premolar or molar teeth on one side of the mandible when there is a fracture just behind the eye tooth the Roger Anderson pin method may be used. Other open methods may be used as well in this specific case. Either open reduction and direct wiring of one fragment to the other or by inserting a wire through the angle of the mandible and exerting a backward pull from a plaster head cap.

Complications

The following complications may arise in the course of treatment :—

(1) Sepsis.—This is controlled by external drainage, removal of dead sequestrated bone, and dead teeth, with prolonged immobilization. The occurrence of sepsis frequently delays the union of a fracture by many weeks or even months and may even require a bone graft. Sepsis is to some extent preventable. A large proportion of fractures of the mandible are compound into the mouth and therefore very liable to become septic. If, on the other hand, efficient fixation can be obtained within the first few hours and oral hygiene is meticulously carried out, the incidence of septic fractures is much reduced. Sulphonamides and, recently, intra-muscular injections of penicillin, are of very great value in preventing and controlling sepsis.

(2) Delayed Union.—This frequently calls for a bone graft and requires prolonged fixation.

(3) Non-Union.—This may be due to extensive loss of bone at the original injury or from bone loss caused by sepsis. A bone graft usually from the ilium is performed when sepsis has cleared up. While the bone graft is consolidating one of the methods of immobilization already described must be used.

(4) Malunion.—This is a serious complication and may result in the patient being unable to close his teeth with resulting difficulty in mastication. Extraction of teeth or even re-fracturing and resetting of the mandible may be necessary.

The Maxilla

Where one-half of the maxilla is separated from the other either intermaxillary wiring or upper and lower cap splints may be used. If the maxilla is impacted a manipulation is necessary to bring it back to its normal position. Where both halves of the maxilla are involved several methods may be used : (1) a Kingsley splint—this is a cap splint with extension arms passing backwards from the angle of the mouth. Hooks on the arms are connected to a head cap by elastics (Fig. 13) ; (2) an upper cap splint fixed to a plaster head cap by rods and universal joints (Fig. 14) ; (3) wires passed round the teeth and through the cheeks to be connected to a head cap (Fig. 15) ; (4) upper and lower teeth fixed together with cap splints and a strong pin inserted into the chin—this pin is itself fixed to a head cap by rods and joints.

If the malar is displaced, as it often is when the maxilla is fractured, operative reduction is necessary by one or more of the following methods :(1) manipulation with a long lever passed behind the malar under the zygomatic arch from the temporal region ; (2) manipulation of the fracture after opening the antrum from the mouth and packing of the antrum ; (3) wiring the bone in position.

Nursing Care

The following points in nursing are of vital importance to the patient's satisfactory progress :—

Feeding.—Many patients with maxillo-facial injuries have their jaws fixed together and are unable to eat normal food, consequently the nursing of these cases presents many problems requiring very considerable care and patience. Selection of a proper diet is highly important. A fluid diet if prolonged for any length of time is very monotonous and every attempt should be made to vary it as much as possible.

Even the worst cases can usually be fed by mouth and there is no need to resort to nasal feeding. In my experience nasal feeding has never been necessary. There may be a useful space between the teeth or if not there is always a space between the cheek and the 2nd and 3rd molar through which the patient soon learns to take food if he is provided with a feeding cup to the spout of which there is a 4 inch extension of rubber tubing (Fig. 16).

The calorific value required by an adult patient in bed should be at least 1,700 calories and, if he is not confined to bed, this should be increased to at least 2,500. A fluid intake to at least 6 pints per day should be maintained. The vitamin intake should be adequate and it is probably advisable to give concentrated vitamin A, C and D to all patients to make sure the diet is not deficient in vitamins. Every effort to give enough roughage should be made, even with the difficulty of reducing cellulose to a semi-fluid state. Vegetable and fruit purees and strained soups are invaluable in this respect. Meals should be given frequently, even every two hours, as the patient will tire before he can take an adequate meal. To keep a check on the patient's diet he should be weighed weekly.

The following foods are suggested : all sorts of fluid drinks given to suit the individual patient and to provide changes, for example, tea, coffee, Bovril, Oxo, Marmite, milk, cocoa, Ovaltine, Horlick's, fruit juices, tomato juice, egg flips ; of the foods which can be rendered semi-solid the following are useful in the construction of a satisfactory diet : semi-fluid porridge, scrambled eggs, minced meat, fowl or fish, mashed potatoes with milk, semi-fluid milk puddings, custard, fruit purees—either fresh, dried or tinned, vegetable purees and strained soups.

Oral Hygiene.—This is of extreme importance in all maxillo-facial cases. If the mouth is not properly cleansed at frequent intervals, food lodges between the teeth or round the splints, the gums becoming increasingly inflamed and the odour of the breath extremely foetid. Most fractures of the jaws are compound and when the mouth is allowed to become highly septic the chances of sepsis in the fracture line with all its serious complications are much increased.

Several methods of oral hygiene may be employed. The simplest is a dental chip syringe which is used to squirt saline, boric, weak eusol, etcetera, into all crevices of the teeth and splints. The mechanical cleansing action is the important part and strong antiseptics should not be used—saline is as good as

TO ASSIST SURGICAL REPAIR

New plastic materials have greatly increased the merits of the modern prosthesis and the photograph (xx) shows the variety that are available—nose, ear, finger, nail and eye which is made of acrylic, almost unbreakable and easy to fit. any. Too much force, which might force septic matter into the fracture site, should not be used. (Fig. 17 shows a tray set with the necessary instruments, and Fig. 18 the cleansing being carried out). A douche can, suitably elevated above the patient and fitted with a fine nozzle, may also be used. If nothing else is available, a clean Higginson's syringe used gently is very useful. An electric atomiser (Fig. 19) or a carbon dioxide pressure spray is also satisfactory. The mouth should be cleaned out after every meal at least. A patient who is not ill can often be instructed how to clean his own mouth provided he is supervized.

In conclusion may I put in a plea for the sympathetic treatment of these patients many of whom are severely disfigured and require months of treatment. Every patient should be considered as an individual ; they all vary in their likes and dislikes and in their response to a disfiguring injury. Each should be given as much freedom as possible within limits, but should, however, not be spoilt so that he makes himself a nuisance to the other patients and to the staff. Occupational therapy within the limits of the patient's physical capacity is very desirable particularly in the long term cases.

The dental surgeon attached to a plastic and jaw injury unit has, in addition to the treatment of jaw injuries, to undertake the construction of various prosthesis either for temporary or permanent use. Plastic materials of various types are now being used to construct artificial eyes, noses, ears etcetera. The photograph (Fig. 20) shows the following prostheses: (1) a large reconstruction of nose, upper lip and cheeks, for a patient who had an extensive epithelioma—the prosthesis was used before surgical repair was carried out ; (2) and (3) noses which were constructed for a patient with lupus where a recurrence and the patient's age prevented surgical repair ; (4) an artificial eye made of acrylic—this eye is almost unbreakable and is easily adjustable to fit the socket—the painting of the iris, however, requires considerable skill and experience ; (5) and (6) artificial ears—so far the reconstruction of an ear by surgery is a long and difficult procedure. The results are often not very satisfactory, and an artificial ear is sometimes indicated ; (7) and (8) artificial fingers—these are made where for some reason surgical reconstruction is not indicated ; (9) an artificial finger nail to cover a deformed nail—this is firmly attached by a type of glue. Fig. 21 shows a patient with the left half of his maxilla removed. He is wearing the prosthesis shown in Fig. 22 to build out his cheek.

The recent introduction of the new plastic materials has opened a very wide field for the construction of various prostheses. The work is still largely experimental, the colours in particular not being completely satisfactory.

Book Reviews

AN INTRODUCTION TO PHYSICAL METHODS OF TREATMENT IN PSYCHIATRY.—By William Sargant, M.A., M.B., (Cantab), M.R.C.P., D.P.M., and Eliot Slater, M.A., M.D. (Cantab), M.R.C.P., D.P.M., (E. and S., Livingstone, Limited, Edinburgh, price 8s. 6d.).

Nurses have been waiting for a book like this, written by two psychiatrists as a result of first-hand experience. The book consists of valuable chapters on up-to-date treatment of mental disorders by such methods as insulin administration, both for schizophrenia and, in modified form, for selected cases of anxiety states in civilians and soldiers; by convulsive therapy in the electrical form which has superseded chemical stimulation; by continuous narcosis; by malarial treatment for general paralysis; by prefrontal leucotomy; by the use of vitamins and endocrine substances; and by drugs in common use; it also tells of the recently proved value of electro-encephalography.

It is a book written largely as a result of war-time experience of neurosis casualties—an experience which has not been lacking in that spirit of enthusiastic adventure without which science would not progress as earnestly as it does. The authors have achieved a discretion and balance of thought, evidenced especially in the great care they give to the proper selection of cases for the respective treatments. It is made plain, for example, that electrical shock treatment is not suitable for depressive cases of all ages. There is also early admission that some treatments have come to be used largely as a result of empirical, rather than scientific, thought; but when the results are gratifying, the methods are justified.

Modern psychiatry combines psychiatry with somatic medicine; the appearance of such a book is, therefore, welcome, as it helps one to realize that one cannot continue to divorce psychological work and general medicine. More than once, in this book, the authors advocate that early nervous illnesses can be treated by the above methods in a general hospital, provided there are psychiatrists on the staff. Such a statement is also an indirect plea for greater understanding and co-operation between the two branches of medicine. "Gjessing has held that the fight against chronicity is one of the main tasks of modern psychiatry." The fight begins in the early stages of a disease, and it is to a general hospital rather than a mental hospital that a patient with a mental disorder will not hesitate to come.

The importance of the well-trained, interested nurse is accepted and emphasized in the nursing required during insulin treatment, continuous sedation, and malarial treatment. Such procedures are described in detail, and though there is absolutely nothing to replace the actual practical work in connection with these treatments, nurses should find such chapters most helpful when the work is new to them.

It is difficult to assess how long such a book will remain up-to-date, as none of the aforementioned methods of treatment is likely to remain static when there is every possibility for new treatments to bring even greater success. Meanwhile, however, it is a book which deserves a place on the library shelves of all mental hospitals, neurological and psychiatric units and general hospitals.

FRACTURES AND ORTHOPAEDIC SURGERY FOR NURSES AND MASSEUSES.—By Arthur Naylor F.R.C.S. (Eng. and Edinburgh). (E. and S. Livingstone, Limited, Edinburgh ; price 16s.)

This up-to-date account of orthopaedic conditions is suitable for intelligent nurses who know their anatomy sufficiently well to be able to follow very clear expositions of the prevention and treatment of injuries, deformities and diseases of the locomotor system. It is very well illustrated. It explains the surgeon's work and at the same time shows the nurse and masseuse their essential part in hastening the patient's recovery. The first chapters illustrate and explain the purpose of various orthopaedic apparatus including the most modern methods of skin and skeletal extension with Braun's frame, the Hamilton-Russell apparatus as well as careful description of the time-honoured methods of obtaining fixed and sliding traction by Thomas's and Hodgen's splints. There are excellent chapters on fractures and diseased conditions. One is glad to see in connection with the treatment of rheumatoid arthritis, the dogmatic statement that though treatment is usually in the hands of a physician, "it is essential that an orthopaedic surgeon should co-operate in the treatment from the beginning if a successful result is to be achieved." How glad, too, one is to find straightforward and up-to-date accounts of slipped intervertebrae disc, march foot, sacro-iliac strain and a host of other conditions so commonly dealt with to-day in an orthopaedic department.

Films in Brief

Zoya

The tragic, true story of an eighteen-year-old Soviet girl guerrilla tortured and murdered by the Germans, acted by a young graduate actress with great feeling. This is her first role.

Lady on a Train

Deanna Durbin in an amusing satirical melodrama, with a clever 'take off' in one of her songs and a most delightful rendering of the carol 'Silent Night.'

Dead of Night

Just full of stars! Michael Redgrave and Mervyn Johns, with Basil Radford and Naunton Wayne in a delightful golfing scene. Six tense sequences, exciting and unusual ; any hint of their contents would spoil them.

RECENT ADVANCES IN CHEMOTHERAPY*

By SIR LIONEL WHITBY, C.V.O., M.C., M.D., F.R.C.P.

IT would be a formidable task to attempt to survey all the latest advances in chemotherapy, and to discuss any of them completely would involve hosts of complicated formulae. Instead I propose to pick out some aspects of the subject which are of special interest to nurses, and discuss them from the nurse's point of view. I will take the sulphonamides and penicillin and, especially for those of you who are likely to go to the Far East, refer briefly to drugs used against some tropical diseases.

1. SULPHONAMIDES

Types of Sulphonamides

Regarding the nomenclature of sulphonamides: the layman speaks of "taking M. & B." which to the medical man of course is a meaningless statement, since the letters simply refer to the manufacturers, May & Baker. This firm has produced numerous different products which are known, for short, by numbers. The famous M. & B. 693 is one sulphonamide, but there are others. The first sulphonamide to be found was sulphanilamide. This drug is cheap, readily obtainable, and useful in certain cases. It has about forty different trade names, so if you see an unfamiliar word on a packet it is as well to ask the doctor what the substance really is; he should know. Sulphanilamide, under whatever name, is effective against streptococci, gonococci, meningococci and Baccillus coli.

Then a more powerful substance was discovered. This is sulphapyridine (known as M. & B. 693), which acts more potently against the cocci mentioned above, and also against pneumococci. Next we have sulphathiazole or M. & B. 760, which goes even one step up in effectiveness by tackling the staphylococcus. The above are English products. The Americans have evolved sulphadiazine, which, though having the same range of action as sulphathiazole, is claimed to be a better drug.

In England we have imitated this American product and produced our own sulphamezathine. This compound has a great advantage over all the most powerful sulphonamides which I have mentioned because it does not give trouble by crystal formation, a point of considerable importance in Burma, where people always tend to be dehydrated and pass little urine. I will refer to this question of crystal formation later. The latest American addition to the sulphonamide series is sulphamerazine, which it is asserted will supersede sulphadiazine and sulphamezathine. Personally I do not think it is as good as either of these.

Choice of a Sulphonamide

Here then we have a series of drugs with much the same range of action. In choosing which to use in particular circumstances there are two considerations to bear in mind: which drug is the most powerful, and which is the most suitable? In a case of a urinary infection, for example, one would be careful to use a compound which had the least tendency to form crystals, such as sulphamezathine.

Rather different from sulphanilamide is sulphacetamide (Albucid). This compound is non-irritating to the conjunctival sac and is therefore used for eye infections. It would have been greatly employed had there been mustard gas attacks.

Anti-Dysentery Drugs

Two drugs which have a great effect on bacterial dysenteries are sulphaguanidine and succinyl sulphathiazole. Sulphaguanidine is perhaps best for the Flexner type and succinyl sulphathiazole is particularly good for children's dysentery (Sonne). These two drugs have had an immense effect upon the conduct of this war. At Gallipoli in World War I, thousands of men were afflicted with dysentery; some suffered permanent harm, others were away from their units for up to six weeks at a time, so that the disease considerably diminished the army's strength. Nowadays a soldier does not even have to leave his unit. A five-day drug course puts him right. One must remember, however, that although sulphaguanidine and succinyl sulphathiazole are best for dysentery, the disease can be treated, if one has not these drugs by sulphapyridine, sulphathiazole or sulphadiazine, although with greater risk.

How Sulphonamides Work

It is necessary to understand how sulphonamides work, in order to appreciate their use in treatment. Bacteria, like ourselves, must have certain kinds of foods, and one of the foods essential for the haemolytic streptococcus has the following formula:

If you can manufacture a substance closely resembling this true foodstuff the bacteria may be deceived and ingest this by mistake. Sulphanilamide has the formula:

It will be observed that this is similar to the above, consisting as it does of a benzene ring and an amino radicle, but instead of the acid radicle the sulphonamide has another group. The new substance therefore, although similar to that which we will call the Acid, is not what the bacteria really want for a normal existence. In consequence the bacteria's rate of reproduction is cut down. With one bacteria no longer multiplying into 17 million like bacteria every 12 hours, the body is able to overcome the invaders.

Since the drug is a food substitute, it follows that: (1) it must be in solution, since unless it is dissolved it cannot pass through the germ's membrane; (2) it must be present in overwhelming proportions, or otherwise the bacteria will select its proper food instead; (3) it is useless against those bacteria which do not take the Acid as a foodstuff, for example, sulphonamides are ineffective against the virus diseases, such as small-pox, common cold, etcetera.

Using Sulphonamides

By virtue of the first qualification, when you use sulphonamides in powder form, for example, for the pleural cavity, after an operation, you would not employ sulphapyridine, because this is very insoluble. Instead select a sulphonamide which readily goes into solution.

Because there is always a large concentration of the acid food in the body, it is necessary to give a full concentration of the food substitute, and to maintain this continuously, so that the bacteria never get the right food and therefore never have a chance to multiply. A mistake which doctors have made is to prescribe one or two tablets at odd intervals. This is worse than useless because the bacteria, given the drug in small doses, become "educated" against it. A mistake which nurses sometimes make is not to give the tablets during the night. When a prescription says "four hourly" it means four hourly night and day. The concentration must be kept up all through the night, for the bacteria do not sleep.

If the sulphonamides are properly used, that is to say, used in the maximum dosage and given continuously, they should produce a result within a week. If relief has not occurred within this time, something is wrong; either the sulphonamide was not applicable in this case or the action of the drug is being inhibited.

What Stops Action of Sulphonamides

The action of sulphonamides is prevented by the presence of the following:

1. Pus.—Since pus contains so much of the acid, the drug can never be in overwhelming concentration. (There is however one sulphonamide whose action is not affected by the presence of pus. This is called marfanil. It was invented by the Germans and captured by us. It is only for local application.)

2. Procaine and Procaine Derivatives.—If procaine is used as a local anaesthetic it is no good applying sulphonamide to the site for several hours.

3. Sodium Hypochlorite.—Sodium hypochlorite in consequence cannot be employed as an irrigation fluid during sulphonamide treatment.

COMPLICATIONS IN THE USE OF SULPHONAMIDES

A. Harmless Complications

1. Cyanosis.—There is a tendency for patients taking sulphonamides to go " blue " in the face. For this reason egg and onion were formerly forbidden; now it has been decided that the only things which should not be given are drastic purgatives which distend the bowel. Saline purges and cascara must therefore be avoided. If nevertheless the patient develops cyanosis, the complication is not serious. It is however distressing to the relatives and for this reason it may be desirable to administer a methylene blue pill when visitors are expected, as this disperses the cyanosis!

2. Vomiting.—This sometimes occurs, especially with sulphapyridine. The usual treatment is to give sodium bicarbonate, but it is not so generally known that there will be less vomiting if the dose is split, i.e., give ¼ g. every hour instead of 1 g. every four hours, until the patient has become accustomed to the drug.

B. Serious Complications

1. Drug Fever.—The patient's temperature first responds satisfactorily to the drug and then suddenly rises again. This rise may be due to a relapse of the disease or to drug fever. In the latter case there will usually be a rash. If there is no rash, one usually takes the risk and continues with the sulphonamide, unless it is obvious that the pneumonia or other symptoms have cleared up. If however, the fresh rise of temperature is accompanied by a rash, the drug treatment must be stopped at once and the doctor notified.

2. Dermatitis.—This condition may be met with especially when using a sulphonamide in local application, as in a case of impetigo. It can generally be avoided by the precaution of never continuing the local application of a sulphonamide for longer than five consecutive days.

3. Haemolytic Anaemia.—This becomes evident on the fifth day of treatment with a sulphonamide and occurs mainly in children.

4. Agranulocytosis.—When this condition occurs the number of white cells falls to a dangerous level. Although this complication is much publicized it is rare. It is estimated that, in the year before the war, people in the United States consumed 700 tons of sulphonamides, and the reported cases of agranulocytosis were only about a dozen. It is however a possible danger which nurses can help guard against by careful observation. If the patient's temperature has gone down with the sulphonamide, the pulse rate improved, and so on, yet the patient appears more lethargic than one would expect having regard to the apparent improvement in his condition, the doctor should be informed, since this listlessness is often a preliminary symptom of agranulocytosis.

4. Urinary Complications.—These arise owing to the formation of crystals unless care is taken to see that the patient drinks and excretes ample quantities of fluid. The danger of crystal formation is greatest with sulphapyridine, sulphathiazole, and sulphadiazine. One should bear in mind that the correct average liquid intake per day is 3 litres and the normal excretion of urine is 1½ litres. In the case of every patient undergoing sulphonamide treatment, it is as well for the nurse to keep the first morning specimen of urine. If the output is good and alkaline, there is little danger of trouble. The first signs of this urinary complication are: (i) crystals; (ii) the appearance of drops of blood (microscopic at first); (iii) profuse bleeding from the kidney colouring the urine red. The patient should never be allowed to get past the second stage.

Promin

So much for the sulphonamides. It will be seen that they have their limitations. We have not yet produced a sulphonamide which will tackle tuberculosis. There are, however, certain substances not unlike sulphonamides, called sulphones. These are more poisonous, but one, known as promin has been found to have a little action on tubercle germs. Results in man are disappointing. Promin is not a cure, but, like the discovery of sulphanilamide in the fight against pneumonia, it may represent a first step to greater things to come.

II. PENICILLIN

Penicillin is, I suppose, the greatest godsend which we have had in this war, and it is, therefore, important to know its scope and limitations.

Action Against Gram Positive Bacteria.—Penicillin acts best against Gram-positive bacteria, including staphylococcus, streptococcus, pneumococcus, some spirochaetes and some of the gas gangrene bacteria.

Action Against Gram-Negative Bacteria.—Penicillin is effective against certain Gram-negative bacteria: gonococcus and meningococcus, but is it not effective against the coli group and is indeed destroyed by members of that group (see below).

It will be observed that penicillin has much the same range of action as the sulphonamides, but it is the most powerful remedy against staphylococcus and it is active in the presence of pus. Unfortunately penicillin is a very unstable compound. It has not yet been available in pure form, and therefore it has been necessary to keep it in a refrigerator; but now refrigeration is no longer necessary in a temperate climate like our own.

Methods of Use

Penicillin may be injected or applied locally. It cannot be administered orally. Penicillin is absorbed and excreted so rapidly that injections have to be given every three hours. This is very painful for the patient, and so the method of continuous intramuscular drip was evolved. This has the disadvantage that air bacteria may get into the bottle from which the penicillin is dripping, and if they do, they rapidly destroy its activity, particularly if they are coliform bacteria. The risk to the patient

Sulphonamide was used to treat a small septic place on the leg and a red brawny ulceration developed rapidly. A few days later a macular rash appeared on the chest, arms and legs; there was also marked erythema of the face and the whole body itched.

What the College is Doing

Points of Interest at the Council Meeting on September 20

THE Council met on Thursday, September 20, after the August recess. Miss M. F. Hughes, President of the Council, was, unfortunately, unable to attend through illness contracted during a visit to Scottish Branches in August. The Council agreed unanimously to send her a letter expressing their good wishes for a speedy recovery.

Training Grants

The Professional Association Committee reported three matters concerned with the Nurses Act, 1943; and the recommendations if the Rushcliffe Salaries Committee, the most interesting was a notification from the Ministry of Health that arrangements were about to be made to give financial assistance to State-registered nurses who wished to train as sister tutors, as recommended by the Rushcliffe report issued in February, 1943. Previously the Ministry had only given grants to hospitals for 50 per cent. of the cost of sending their nurses to obtain this training. The new grants would be open to all; and the Ministry of Health suggested a professional selection board be appointed under the chairmanship of the Chief Nursing Officer of the Ministry or her deputy, and invite The Royal College of Nursing to appoint a representative to serve on the board. The Council learned of this with great satisfaction as they had continuously pressed for such action to be taken on this recommendation; they agreed to the proposals and recommended that the Director of the Education Department serve as their representative.

A Misleading Title

Secondly, the Committee reported that Mr. H. Linstead, M.P. had tabled a motion to annul the Draft Nurses Regulations under Proviso B, Section 1, of the Nurses Act, 1943, which includes permission for the use of the title 'Christian Science Nurse.' Commander Clarke Hutchison had tabled a similar motion in regard to the Scottish Act. This would permit the whole question to be debated and voted upon in the House of Commons before these regulations become law, and the Council learnt of it with great satisfaction, as they felt the use of the title 'nurse' by these workers was misleading.

Thirdly, the Ministry had written concerning the position of persons training as assistant nurses after October 15, 1945, during the intermediate period until enrolment by examination is compulsory, and suggested that they be permitted to term themselves 'probationer assistant nurse'. The Honorary Officers had replied to this suggestion on behalf of the Council members, as it was a matter of urgency.

Compensation for Injury

The Professional Association Committee also reported that the Government, in order to expedite matters, had decided to deal with the question of compensation for injury at work in a separate bill before they dealt with the main provisions of the national insurance scheme of which this is a part. The text of the Bill had just become available and Council decided to compare the text with the memorandum submitted to Lord Jowitt by a deputation from the College in April, 1945. He then suggested that he should meet representatives of the Royal College of Nursing again when legislation had been drafted, and Council decided that the new minister should be asked to do so now, after detailed consideration as to how far the nurse's position with regard to infections and injuries resulting from her work had been met.

Intelligence Tests

The Council decided to draw up a memorandum on the subject of the test examination for candidates for the nursing profession. The Horder Committee had made certain recommendations on this question, particularly in connection with the introduction of tests rather of intelligence and aptitude than of general knowledge, since the general knowledge questions had been a subject of criticism previously. The Sister Tutor Section had pressed for the introduction of some test because of the waste of time and energy in attempting to prepare candidates who had not the competence to reach the examination standards. The Council felt that more harm than good was done by permitting those candidates to be accepted for training, and that they should be diverted to the training for the assistant nurse or encouraged to work as ward orderlies.

For Demobilized Nurses

The Council agreed to a suggestion from the Professional Association Committee that they should draw up and publish a leaflet to assist nurses who were being demobilized, and to ensure that they were resettled in the Civilian Nursing Services in the most profitable manner. The leaflet would point out the fields of shortage, the advanced and refresher courses available, the various funds and grants which offered financial help to those requiring such courses, and the prospects of the fully qualified person, for the guidance of members and other nurses.

The Education Department announced that 25 students out of 35 had gained the Sister Tutor Certificate, one of whom, Miss P. R. Rowley of the Royal Surrey County Hospital, Guildford, a Cowdray Scholar, had obtained distinctions in all subjects. Six out of 10 students had gained certificates in Nursing Administration and 21 out of 23 students the Health Visitor's Certificate.

Parentcraft Teaching Course

A first course in the Teaching of Parentcraft had been held and 8 out of 10 students had passed: the department had deferred the next course till January, 1946, as the number of applicants was not sufficient to make it necessary to hold a course sooner. Refresher Courses for health visitors had been held in London, Oxford and Newcastle and 124 students had attended them. A first course in Venereal Diseases had been begun. The Sister Tutor Section asked the Council to approve the addition of the names of Miss H. M. Banyard and Miss K. A. B. Fowler to the Roll of Qualified Sister Tutors.

An Excessive "Load"

The Public Health Section asked leave to protest to the Ministries of Health and Labour on the excessive 'case load' (200 births in the population per health visitor) which they had recommended. This figure was double that recommended by the Section and had resulted in the reduction of staffs which must cause a resultant lowering of the standards of the health services in many parts of the country. They also asked that a request be made to the Rushcliffe Salaries Committee for reconsideration of its recommendations for travelling allowances with a view to recommending standardized car allowance and mileage rates.

The Public Health Section asked that the Children's Department of the Home Office be consulted regarding the qualifications considered necessary for the women officers now being appointed under schemes to control the care of children who were boarded out.

The Section is arranging a victory re-union and 'bring and buy' sale on Saturday, December 1, at Headquarters, and a quarterly meeting at Stoke-on-Trent, on November 24.

Scotland Protests

The Scottish Board announced that they had sent a letter to the new Secretary of State for Scotland, the Right Hon. J. Westwood, M.P., protesting against Clause 2. 1. (n) of the Nurse (Scotland) Regulations, 1945, which permits persons belonging to the body known as Church of Christ Scientist to use the title "Christian Science Nurse." Also in connection with the Nurses (Scotland) Act, 1943, they had had informal discussions with members of the Department of Health and others on matters connected with the List of Nurses trained abroad but wishing to work in this country. They had also agreed to the use of the title "probationer assistant nurse" to be used for persons qualifying to become assistant nurses with intermediate qualifications.

The Scottish Board reported that they had accepted sixteen students for the Sister Tutor Course arranged in conjunction with Edinburgh University and it would begin on October 8, 1945. The Council congratulated the Board on this advance, and also on the Refresher Course for Trained Nurses arranged in Glasgow and attended by 33 nurses. Since July, 37 applications for membership had come from Scotland and 142 applications for membership of the Student Nurses' Association.

Northern Ireland Appointments

The Committee for Northern Ireland reported that Mr. W. M. Dick had accepted the appointment of honorary treasurer to the Committee: he is joint manager of the Central Branch of the Belfast Banking Company. The Committee had also approved the appointment of Miss M. Sheehan, S.R.N., as area organizer to Northern Ireland, and she had taken up her duties on August 1, 1945.

A Library of Nursing

The Committee felt that, in connection with the development of post-graduate education in Northern Ireland, there was great need for a Library of Nursing to be founded as early as possible. The Committee were pressing the Ministry of Health and Local Government to arrange that nurses in Northern Ireland should participate in the Superannuation Scheme being prepared by the Joint Rushcliffe and Taylor Sub-committee.

The Establishment Committee reported that Miss M. F. Reidy had taken up her duties as Secretary to the Public Health Section on August 1, 1945.

A Legacy

The Council gratefully accepted a legacy of £500 from a member in Trust for the Nation's Fund for Nurses.

Grants to Members and Other Nurses

The Council approved grants of £7 and £10 to members from the Sick Insurance Fund, and grants to the amount of £484 from the Air Raid Victims Relief Funds.

of a few bacteria slipping in is negligible, but complete sterility is essential for preserving the potency of the penicillin.

Precautions

The intramuscular drip is used in preference to the intravenous route because it was found that in using the latter a high rate of thrombosis occurred. Research is proceeding with a view to linking penicillin with something so that it shall be slowly absorbed and slowly excreted. Success will do away with the necessity for continuous drip methods.

In addition to being destroyed by coliform and other air bacteria, the potency of penicillin is spoilt by: acids; metals (for this reason the joints in a penicillin apparatus must be of the finest stainless steel); inferior rubber tubing. It is no good using any piece of rubber tubing. If in doubt ask your bacteriologist whether the piece selected is suitable. Synthetic rubber tubings may destroy the penicillin The latex type is very good, but is not obtainable here.

III. DRUGS USED AGAINST TROPICAL DISEASES

Black Sickness

Although almost unheard of in this country, black sickness (Kala-azar) causes great disability in India, Burma, the Far East the Middle East, and the Sudan, etc. It was formerly treated by an antimony compound. Now a group of drugs is used, called the diamidines: these were discovered in research work on the sulphonamides.

Malaria

In combating malaria we use two synthetic drugs which are complementary in their action. They are mepacrine and pamaquin. Mepacrine was invented by the Germans and improved by ourselves, and is active against that part of the life cycle of the malaria parasite which occurs in man; this is the asexual stage. It is inactive against those stages of the life cycle of the parasite, found in the mosquito. Pamaquin, on the other hand, is active against the cycle in the mosquito (the sexual life history) and inactive against the cycle in man. Therefore one can suppress malaria in humans by mepacrine or quinine, and gives pamaquin to kill the sexual forms of the parasite which the mosquito would take up when it sucks the person's blood thus passing on the disease. It is important to remember that mepacrine usually only suppresses the disease, and if a man goes to a temperate climate and ceases to take his mepacrine, he will often suffer a relapse.

Mepacrine is given as a prophylactic measure, and it will be part of your duty as nurses to ensure the maintenance of this "malaria discipline." It is most important that the men should take the tablets as directed. In one year in Burma the casualties from malaria amounted to some 200,000. In comparison, the casualties from Japanese bullets were 20,000.

Nurses Salaries Committee

—Further recommendations and points of interpretation

THE following extract from the Nurses Salaries Committee's "Notes, No. 7,"* shows the new recommendations concerning salaries on the occasion of promotion. They apply also to mental nurses as they are similar to the recommendations of the Mental Nurses Salaries Committee's "Notes, No. 4."

ANNUAL INCREMENTS

The First and Second Reports of the Nurses Salaries Committee provide in general that a nurse promoted to a higher grade shall enter the new scale at the minimum, or (if the nurse is already receiving a higher salary) at the point equal to the salary before transfer or (if there is no exactly equal point) at the next higher point.

The Reports further provide that a nurse promoted to a higher grade shall not be entitled to an increment on April 1 following promotion unless he or she has at that date served at least six months in the new grade; provided that, if application of this principle would have the result that a nurse on April 1 following promotion would receive a lower salary than he or she would have received if not promoted, the nurse shall be entitled to an increment even if he or she has served less than six months in the new grade.

It has been represented to the Committee that, under the above provisions a nurse might, on promotion, receive no financial benefit for up to 18 months. Having considered the matter further, the Committee now RECOMMEND that:-(i) where under the existing recommendations a nurse promoted to a higher grade would continue to receive the same salary, excluding any acting allowance, as he or she had been receiving on the old scale, the nurse shall receive an increment (other than a long service increment), on the new scale immediately on promotion, notwithstanding anything in the existing recommendations; (ii) subject to (i) above, the existing recommendations shall continue to apply, with the modification that, if application of the principle that increments shall not be granted on April 1 unless the nurse has served at least six months in the new grade, would have the result that a nurse on April 1 following promotion would receive a cash salary (exclusive of emoluments and any living out allowance) not higher than he or she would have received if not promoted, the nurse shall be entitled to an increment, even if he or she has served less than six months in the new grade; (iii) the revised recommendations set out above shall apply in respect of promotions made on or after the date of publication of these Notes; and in the case of a nurse promoted between April 1, 1943, and the date of the publication of these Notes, he or she shall be placed, as from the date of publication, on the same point on his or her salary scale as he or she would have reached if the recommendations had operated from April 1, 1943, but arrears shall not be payable in respect of any period prior to the date of publication of these Notes.

The Mental Nurses Sub-Committee's recommendations run parallel they supplement the Sub-Committee's Report and recommendation (ii) above is a modification of paragraph 64 (b).

Fighting for Freedom

Nursing recruitment at the moment is of first class importance, and nurses, we are told, are wanted more than ever before, but one is inclined to wonder if women will come forward to answer the call now that freedom of choice of occupation after entry to the nursing profession has been so curtailed. The majority of British people were "fighting for freedom," freedom of speech and freedom of choice, but, as the people who volunteer for this essential work find to their cost, after having done so, they are neither allowed the freedom to choose where they would like to work or what branch of the profession they would like to join after having qualified, or even to leave the occupation unless they loose freedom automatically through marriage. We wonder if soon women will be commandeered to cope with the rising need for nurses, because we hardly feel that many will freely choose such a restricted occupation.

A. H. CRAVEN, S.R.N.

Age Limit

With regard to the shortage of nurses, I think it is possible that the public have not forgotten how, in the years before the war, most nursing appointments were advertised with the clause, "Not over 35 years of age." Many trained nurses were obliged to take posts as companions, and to do other non-nursing work. It does not seem a good proposition to spend 3 or 4 years in training, with the prospect of such a short career.

London, W.1. E. TUCKER.

Sufficient Salary ¿

With regard to the Topical Note "Sufficient Salary?" in last week's Nursing Times (page 615), I suggest that you modify your criticism of the salary offered by the Ministry of Health for women inspectors, nursing officers and dietitians since the salary increases so generously.

I do not think that the Nursing Times intends to discourage those who have applied for the posts, for there is a comparative scarcity of administrative posts with a salary of over £360 per annum, but rather to encourage those who have salaries over £360 to apply. Nothing is said about the number of officers needed, but it would appear from the Ministry's advertisement that the women inspectors, with wide public health experience, will have not only to inspect but to assist with record keeping. I think that many of the applicants whom the Nursing Times would consider satisfactory, being already "captain of their own ships" and established, would not be induced to move for any salary.

On the other hand, although an investigation among members of 35 to 40 years old (to give them time to gain qualifications and experience), of the Public Health Section of the Royal College of Nursing, might show, surprisingly to some, to what heights of salary, by toil and sweat, they had risen, nevertheless the majority remain at a salary of £360 a year. Surely, wide experience, combined with confidence, zeal and powers of observation, even if not assessed in salary, are worthy of recognition without censure.

COLLEGE MEMBER.

[No one would wish to belittle the work, the capabilities or character of the health visitor, but the posts which the Ministry of Health seek to fill obviously call for highly responsible women with experience of supervision, and we think they should form the peak to which the superintendent health visitor could rise and should hold a salary above the average maximum. Even if, as seems probable under the circumstances, the posts are filled by health visitors, not superintendents, we consider that an initial salary well above the maximum salary for a health visitor should be offered.—ED.]

To Enrol or Not ?

As the Nurses Act, 1945, comes into force on October 15, we are gravely concerned to find that a large percentage of existing assistant nurses have still failed to enrol. These include nurses working in hospitals, private assistant nurses and many who belong to the Assistant Nurses' Society.

We feel there are several reasons for this. In spite of our efforts and those of the matrons, there does not appear to have been adequate publicity and many do not understand the vital importance of becoming enrolled. Other factors include the fact that the salaries laid down by the Rushcliffe Scale are considerably lower than those paid to "male and female attendants" and even the domestic workers in some hospitals. We understand that many "attendants," who are entitled to promotion to the grade of assistant nurse, would receive a lower salary if they were to enrol. Because of this the Middlesex County Council has given the assistant nurses, who are in charge of old people, the option of reverting to the grade of female attendants. Fortunately those concerned have decided to await the revision of their salaries.

There also appear to be other misunderstandings, therefore, we should be most grateful if you would be kind enough to bring the following facts to the notice of your readers, since the position of the assistant nurse affects the whole of the profession. The National Association of Assistant Nurses exists to guard their interests and is doing everything possible to help them. It has approached the authorities concerned, who are alive to the necessity of improving conditions for them. They may rest assured that the Rushcliffe Committee is reconsidering their scales of salaries, and that the 96-hour fortnight will come into force, directly the post-war conditions make it possible.

The work of assistant nurses is destined to grow in scope and prestige, therefore it is well worth while for all those who are eligible to avail themselves of the opportunity of enrolling and so obtaining valuable statutory qualifications. Enrolment does not mean that they will be forced to continue to nurse, if they wish to give up the work at a later date, but when the Act comes into force on October 15, only enrolled assistant nurses will be allowed to use this title, and the others will lose their status and privileges.

The time of grace during which existing assistant nurses (i.e., those who had two years' training and experience before March 17, 1943) may enrol, expires on February 6, 1946. Therefore, unless they do so by that date, they will lose the opportunity of becoming assistant nurses, and will only be admitted to the roll after taking two years' training.

The reason why many people who have sent in their applications are still waiting for their certificates is because of the great numbers with which the Council has had to deal. We feel sure they are doing all they can to cope with their gigantic task as quickly as possible. All assistant nurses who have not already done so should write to the Registrar, General Nursing Council for England and Wales, 23, Portland Place, London, W.1, and ask for forms at once. If they are in any difficulty or need further information, we shall be glad to help them, if they will write to us.

DIANA HARTLEY,
Acting Organizing Secretary,
The National Association of Assistant Nurses.

Farewell Party for Matron

A fur cape, an oak chest, a cheque and a bouquet, the gifts of the nursing staff, were presented to Miss E. Keen, O.B.E., matron of the Royal Portsmouth Hospital, at a farewell party held in the Nurses' Home on September 15. Miss Keen, who is retiring this month, also received a pair of blankets, the gift of the domestic staff. Nurses and sisters who were members of the staff when Miss Keen was appointed, and nurses who, during the war, had been in the Far and Middle East, Italy and India, were also present. Miss Keen spoke of the many changes which had taken place during her appointment; of the opening of new wards and the preliminary training school; of the removal of the hospital to the annexe at St. James's as the result of war damage; of the return to the old site and the re-establishment of the training school. She expressed her delight at seeing so many nurses present and thanked all her staff for their unfailing loyalty in the most difficult times.

She held sisters' appointments at Dudley Road, Birmingham until 1942, when she went to Hertford County Hospital.

THE JOINT CONSULTATIVE COUNCIL—of Institutions Recognized by the Minister of Health for the training of health visitors, and of organizations of health visitors

This Council, first formed in 1932, following a Conference of representatives of Training Institutions called by the Women Public Health Officers' Association in November, 1931, held its final meeting on July 2, 1945 when it was decided to dissolve. Under the chairmanship, first of Mrs. Reid, then Director of the Social Studies' Department of Bedford College, and later of Professor Winifred Cullis, C.B.E., M.A., D.Sc., LL.D., and with Miss Amy Sayle, M.B.E., M.A., L.C.C., as honorary secretary through the whole period, the Joint Consultative Council has worked to secure close co-operation between the fourteen affiliated training institutions and the two organizations representing health visitors, i.e., the Public Health Section of the Royal College of Nursing and the Women Public Health Officers' Association in matters concerning the training and examination of health visitors and the relation of supply to demand.

The Ministry of Health, having invited all the training institutions to form a Standing Conference of Training Institutions and the Royal Sanitary Institute having extended its Health Visitors' Examination Committee to include representatives of the Standing Conference of Training Institutions and representatives of the Public Health Section of the Royal College of Nursing and the Women Public Health Officers' Association, the function of the Joint Consultative Council has been mainly fulfilled, and its work will now be carried on by the Standing Conference of Training Institutions in co-operation with the Health Visitors' Examination Committee.

Miss Sayle has worked hard for the Joint Consultative Council as its honorary secretary for thirteen years.. All health visitors owe her a deep debt of gratitude for the valuable work which she has done.

NURSES' APPEAL FOR NURSES

Nation's Fund for Nurses

We have had a letter this week in which a nurse said "coal and other things are so expensive that my pension does not go as far as I should like." This nurse was not asking for help, she was wanting to sell some of her possessions. You can imagine how it must feel after a busy and independent life, to have to sell one's belongings in order to keep warm in one's later years. Accepting charity is not pleasant, but surely a tribute given—as you can give it—through our Fund to nurses who have worked hard, should not be called charity.

At Astley Ainslie Institution, Edinburgh, on September 1, 1945, following the student nurses' rally, a ring was found. Would loser please communicate with the Scottish Area Organizer, Miss M. D. Stewart, 140, Titwood Road, Glasgow, S.1.

The Society of Registered Male Nurses Meets

At the last meeting of the Society of Registered Male Nurses, members present agreed that a letter be sent to the Minister of Health and a copy to the Rushcliffe Committee, with regard to the smallness of the assistant nurses' salary, requesting that it and all other salaries be raised. Members also agreed that their secretary write to all newly qualified male nurses to point out the advantages of becoming members.

Swimming Gala at Bath

Nurses of the Royal United Hospital, Bath, held a successful swimimng gala recently. The Inter-Hospital Relay Cup was won by the Royal United Hospital team. The Championship Cup (Mitchell Cup) was won by Miss Moody, of the Bath and Wessex Children's Orthopaedic Hospital. The Kindersley Cup for diving was won by Miss N. Hughes, of the Royal United Hospital.

Much amusement was caused by the apple and umbrella races, and some decorative and effective costumes were shown in the partner's fancy dress race.

Prize Giving at Chesterfield

In the absence of Miss M. F. Hughes, Miss M. K. Slarke, former matron of Chesterfield and North Derbyshire Royal Hospital, presented medals and prizes at that hospital recently. A telegram of good wishes and a bouquet of red carnations were sent from the gathering to Miss Hughes, and the matron, Miss M. Richardson, thanked all who had helped her—the sister tutors, the ward and departmental sisters and especially the home sister—since her appointment.

Winners of the chief awards were as follows: Gold medal—Miss M. Arnold. Silver medal—Miss L. Pykett. Final hospital examination—Miss M. A. Bowler and Miss H. M. Utitz. Medical examination—Miss K. Bulmer and Miss H. M. Utitz. Surgical examination—Miss K. Skinner, Miss U. J. Camplin and Miss M. H. Grant.

Good to Read

The Fifth Annual Report of the War Organization of the British Red Cross Society and Order of St. John of Jerusalem gives full accounts of that organization's colossal and varied activities. The union of the British Red Cross Society with the Order of St. John of Jerusalem came to a close at the end of the war and this report of 230 pages gives some idea of the enormous number of people who owe, if not always their lives, their sanity, to its ministrations.

Royal United Hospital Re-union

The first annual re-union of the Past Nurses' League was held at the Royal United Hospital, Bath, on September 15. Over fifty members attended, and were delighted to meet old friends, and to hear news of those who were unable to come. After the business meeting, visits were paid to the wards. The tea and talk which followed rounded off a very successful meeting.

QUEEN'S INSTITUTE OF DISTRICT NURSING

Examination for the Roll of Queen's Nurses

1. What advice would you give at the present time for a mother on how to feed her family? The family consists of a baby 7 months, and childred aged 3 and 9. The husband is a labourer who has to take a packed lunch.
2. Describe the regular nursing care you would give to a young man with complete paralysis of both legs due to spine injury. What occupational diversions could you suggest for him?
3. What precautions would you take in nursing a baby aged 6 days with pemphigus? What general advice would you give to the mother? Make out for the doctor a typical report of your visit.
4. Outline a talk to adolescent girls on personal hygiene.
5. Give two examples of actual or imaginary district nursing cases where financial or other help has been needed and state from what source it was obtained.
6. (a) What equipment would you ask your Committee to provide for your work as the first district nurse in a single district, undertaking general nursing only? or (b) What have been the causes for the increase in tuberculosis of recent years? What special measures are being taken to detect and combat this disease?

VALOGEN

Trade Mark

A Rational Reinvigorating Tonic

In the absence of adequate amounts of the 'organic catalysts' (the vitamins of the 'B' group) all the metabolic processes of body cells are slowed up or otherwise deranged. Deficiency of iron, resulting in subclinical anaemia, restricts the amount of oxygen available to the body cells and so causes further derangement of metabolism.

Valogen corrects both deficiencies, of iron and of vitamins; it is effective, therefore, in correcting or preventing lassitude, lack of energy, apathy and mild states of constipation, skin lesions and similar conditions of subnormal health and reduced physical efficiency.

Valogen is particularly suitable for adolescents and adults but it may be given also to children.

Valogen is obtainable from the principal retail pharmacists.

COLLOSOL Argentum is a thoroughly established therapeutic agent for use in all types of chronic inflammatory conditions, skin and ear, nose and throat infections.

As a general antiseptic it is rather more than equal to 1 per cent. phenol, and is at the same time completely non-toxic, non-irritant and non-staining.

In all inflammatory conditions of the eye Collosol Argentum is of pronounced value, while for ophthalmic neonatorum it has become a standard treatment.
